Dear Dr. neelu ma'am,

I am a web developer helping make the world a better place through JavaScript, Ruby, and UI design.

I'm writing to you regarding Nardcart's Web Developer opening, which I discovered on Indeed. I've been working as a Web Developer at Grooming Technologies for more than 9 years now, and during that time I've revamped web security applications, designed and developed a user-friendly website, and trained over 50 staff members in internal web functions. I'm interested in working for Nardcart because I want to further my own knowledge and interest in web development, and I believe I'll be able to offer new ideas to help nardcart reach and surpass the primary objectives mentioned in its job ad.

I find it very boring. I believe knowing a person is an art. It's like an open world game, you don't know a person you explore him, more you explore, more you get comfortable. Thousands of stories and choices, one leading to another. A storyline with the addition of some genes which builds personality.

I always make this game hard for others. As I have said before, a 'hacker doesn't just exploit, he also patches'. The best way to patch your vulnerabilities - is to stop living in ignorance. Start being honest with yourself. Sadly, today our society is filled with fake people. No one is truly real. Our emotions like guilt, ego, anger, fear always stops us from looking at ourselves. We all lost touch with honesty the moment we lost our innocence.

- I took red pill in life and I feel bad because I know how miserable you get with this.
- When I imagine my life, I always see myself sitting in a dark room all night. Doing some shit on my computer while being connected to this crazy technology, the Internet.
- Sometimes when I turn off my computer, I realize "I am completely alone". I lead myself into this. It's a choice. I might feel bad, but I never regret it.
- I always have mixed opinions, it helps me make my game tough.
- I look things with different perspective, but it's hard, so I end up like most people, using my perspective in a way which helps my agenda or emotions. Perception is a great game. When you master it you can justify all action in a way which makes sense.
